

Solo Sculpture Show at the Dolphin

Jan. 14 – March 1

An exhibit of sculptures by Frank Schueler will open the year in the newly renovated Dolphin Gallery with a show titled "Introspective."

Frank Schueler's sculptures are carved, welded, and assembled using wood, stone, metals and plastics, or a combination of these materials. Some of the sculptures are cast in bronze. This exhibit displays a selection of his most recent work.

Frank explains that he often works with a theme to develop a series of sculptures while exploring the meaning and extent of an idea. He says, "I am intrigued by the shape of the circle. For this show I have further explored this concept. Several of the pieces show an Asian influence as a result of my recent visit to Japan."

What started as a hobby some 37 years ago soon became a major focal point of Frank Schueler's life. His first solo sculpture exhibit took place in Cambria, California, in 1972, at the Whittle House Gallery. Since then he has shown his work nationwide and in Germany, including a show in Gualala at the Starry-Sheets Gallery in 1988. Collectors of Schueler's work include individuals and corporations across the U.S., as well as in Europe and Asia.

Currently he is working on a series of large columns for an outdoor installation. Some of them move or turn gently with the wind. In addition, he cuts and welds "retired" agricultural cultivator disks and other farm implements to create works in his series "Oracle" and "Herald."

Frank Schueler's work is based on a love for clean and touchable forms, reflecting his technical background as an electro-mechanical journeyman in Germany. He enjoys the process and the product, the artistic and technical challenges, and the reactions his sculptures receive. Recently he said, "It is a great joy for me to observe people looking at my work, not only with their eyes, but also with their hands. I strive to give value to my materials, which often are discards of man or nature."

A Call for Artists and Vendors

The Hearts for Arts Fundraiser for the schools on February 11, is an opportunity for artists and vendors with items relating to Valentine's Day or gifts for that special person, to find buyers in a happy mood. There will be music, food, and people enjoying a community happening. Begin now to plan to take part in the "Hearts for Arts." What can you make or sell that would make this holiday very special for someone? Call Spencer at 884-1138 for more information.
