Exhibit Statement: The exhibition takes its name from the iconic 1972 photograph captured by the Apollo 17 spacecraft—a full view of Earth from space that resembled a shimmering blue marble. This image, the first of its kind, became a symbol of unity and environmental awareness, helping to spark the first Earth Day celebrations in the 1970s.

Now, more than five decades later, Earth Day continues to inspire over a billion people worldwide to take action in support of environmental protection. As Earth Day turns 56 in 2026, Blue Marble offers a timely opportunity to reflect on our collective impact and the urgent need for stewardship. Artists working in 3D-medium are invited to submit works that explore themes of climate change, ecology, and environmental justice. The exhibition will create a dynamic, multidisciplinary celebration of Earth and its future.
